Ercros participates in the "Madrid Next Talent" conference to promote the development and recruitment of talent

Juan Ignacio Ledesma, head of Human Resources of the pharmaceuticals division of Ercros, highlighted the company's collaboration with educational centres as a way to train and retain talent.

Ercros has participated in the conference "Talent that connects", organized by Madrifood Next held in the Carlos III Hall of the Royal Theater of Aranjuez, with the collaboration of the Agrifood Cluster of the Community of Madrid (Madrifood), the Ministry of Labor and Social Economy through the State Public Employment Service (SEPE), the Community of Madrid and the City Council of Aranjuez. The meeting brought together companies, public administrations and professionals to analyze the skills currently demanded by the labor market, the impact of artificial intelligence and the opportunities for employability in the sector.

Juan Ignacio Ledesma, head of Human Resources of the pharmaceuticals division of Ercros, took part in the round table "What talent do our companies need?" together with Ana Belén García, deputy director general of the Public Employment Service of the Community of Madrid; Ignacio Díaz Toribio, councillor delegate for Economic Dynamisation and Employment of the City of Aranjuez, and Rebeca Comino, from the Human Resources department of Grupo Tello Alimentación.

During his participation, Ledesma shared the company's experience in attracting and developing talent and highlighted its commitment to collaboration with educational centres through internship programmes for Vocational Training, Dual Vocational Training, undergraduate and postgraduate students. This strategy has allowed Ercros to train new professionals, facilitate their incorporation into the labour market and promote talent retention.
